VSL Call Script: Freeman's Way

Rebuilt 15 Oct from Freeman's 14 Oct coaching. Use it on every VSL lead (ASA2 and ATA1). Older coaching and the full objection bank: library/vsl-coaching-notes.md.

The mindset: they applied to us

They watched an ad, clicked a button, maybe watched a 25-minute video, filled in an application and picked a time to speak to us. They applied. We are not grateful for their time; we're checking if they're a fit. It's a job interview, and we're the employer.

- Militant, but playful. Direct and serious about the standard, with a joke in it so it never feels rude. Freeman with Marshall eating on the call: "This isn't school, you can eat your food, but I can't help you sort out your property life with a mouthful of rice."
- Talk is cheap. Never take the first answer. Every vague word gets a follow-up.
- Qualify people out. The setters with the best show-to-close numbers were the toughest on who got booked. If someone drops out because we challenged them, they were never ready.
- I'm their confidant and their filter. Friendly enough that they drop their shoulders, firm enough that only serious people reach Freeman.
- Freeman should never have to educate anyone on his call. If they can't explain the model back to me, they don't go in his diary.

The six standards (all six, or no Freeman slot)

Standard	How I know
1. A real why	I can say it in one line: "[Name] wants [goal] because [pain], and it has to be now because [reason]."
2. Video watched in full	They explained it back to me. I never just ask "did you watch it?"
3. Funds confirmed	A liquid figure in their words, plus any credit.
4. Decision maker on the call	Alone, or the partner is booked onto Freeman's call too.
5. They know it's paid mentorship	"It's not free" landed, and they're still keen.
6. They'll treat it like an interview	Quiet place, camera on, not driving, not eating, not at the hairdresser's.

Missing one? Book a check-in, not a Freeman slot.

Before you dial (1 minute)

- Read all 10 application answers: funds range, timeline, blocker, dream (Q6), work.
- Funnel from the Slack post: ASA2 = rent-to-rent, ATA1 = Management. Talk about that one only.
- Pick one why question from their Q6 words, ready to ask.
- Freeman's calendar open, two slots in mind. Couples: Sat or Sun, 12:30–3.
- Energy up. Stand up. Keep it up to the last line.

Call 1: the first call

1. Open (make it clear I'm not Freeman)

> “Hi [Name], it's Tye from Freeman Richards' team. I work alongside Freeman, so I'm not him, you'll meet him on the next call. You applied to work with Freeman about starting your Airbnb business. Have I got the right person?”

Three leads have thought I was Freeman. Say "I work alongside Freeman" every time.

2. Set the frame (authority)

> “Perfect. So you know how this works: you've applied to work with Freeman, and my job is to see if you're actually a fit before I put you in front of him. Think of it like the first stage of an interview. He only takes on people he's confident he can get results for. Have you got ten minutes somewhere quiet?”

If they're out, driving, or there's noise:

> “Sounds like you're out and about. This is your business we're talking about, so I'd rather do it properly. When are you back somewhere quiet today?”

If they push back on the questions ("just tell me how to get started"):

> “That's exactly what Freeman maps out with you on the call. My job right now is to check you're a fit, because he only takes on people he's sure he can get results for. Five minutes, fair?”

> Don't
> Never open with "I'm quite busy today" or "sorry if I've disturbed you". They applied. A fresh app is the priority.

3. The video: prove it, don't ask it

> “Before we get into it, you watched Freeman's video on the page. What stood out to you?”

> “In the most basic way possible, could you explain back to me how the Airbnb model works?”

- Explains it well: "Love that, you've clearly done your homework." Move on.
- Partly: "Where did you get up to?" Give the one-line model, then the video goes on the one-rule list (step 11).
- Not at all: one-line model now, and no Freeman slot until it's watched in full.

One-line models (full Management explanation at the end):

> “Rent-to-rent: you take a property from a landlord on a lease, let it out night by night on Airbnb, and keep the difference.”

> “Management: you run someone else's property on Airbnb for them and take a percentage. No rent, no bills, no set-up costs.”

Never say "VSL" to a lead. It's "the video on the page".

4. Work and pain (the interview questions)

> “If you don't mind me asking, what do you do for work?”

> “How long have you been doing that? How many hours is a shift?”

> “Is that something you see yourself doing long term?”

Without the job you can't feel the pain. Without the pain the goal is just a number.

5. The goal, in numbers

> “If you were sat in a job interview and they asked what you want to achieve in the next six months, you wouldn't say "more money", would you? So, six months from now, what do you want to have achieved with this? Be specific.”

> “How much a month would make this worth it for you?”

Small number? Raise it: "That's a humble goal. Most students get their first property in six to seven weeks."

Future pace: "Picture yourself making that. What's different in your life? What are you doing on a Tuesday morning?"

6. The why (the most important part of the call)

Ask, then shut up. Write their exact words down. Then go one level deeper with their own word.

> “Out of curiosity, why are you even looking for a mentor? There's YouTube, Google, ChatGPT. Why are you on a call with us?”

> “Why now, and not in six months?”

> “What have you actually done about it so far?”

> “What happens if nothing changes, and you're in the same spot this time next year?”

The method: isolate one word and flip it back. Pick the word that carries the feeling ("free", "stuck", "tired", "family") and ask about that word only. Then: "And why does that matter so much to you?" Then silence. Keep going until you hear something they feel: a job they hate, time away from their kids, money stress, a deadline.

> Don't
> Never answer it for them. "I'm guessing you want to buy your time back and spend it with people you value, is that right?" gets a "yeah" every time, and a "yeah" is my why, not theirs. Ask open, then count to five.

The pain ladder. Don't move to money until I've heard level 3 in their words.

1. The fact: "I work 12-hour shifts." (Most calls stop here.)
2. The cost: "What's that costing you? What does it look like day to day? Who else does it affect?"
3. The feeling and the stakes: "How long have you felt like that? What happens if you're in the same spot next year?"

> Tip
> When they hand me pain ("barely surviving", "my back's hurting", "always stressed", "don't want to wait till 2028"), stop. Don't say "I get that" and move on to work. Say their word back: "Barely surviving. What does that look like?" That pain is what the call is for.

If they've only got five minutes, ask the why first and book the rest. Funds and location take thirty seconds next time.

Follow-up questions to the why: what they say → what I ask

They say	I ask
"Freedom" / "financial freedom"	"Free from what, exactly?" → "What does free look like on a Monday morning?" → "How long have you felt that way?"
"Extra income" / "more money"	"How much, exactly?" → "What would that money change?" → "Who's it for?"
"I want to leave my job"	"What is it about the job?" → "How long have you felt like that?" → "What's stopped you leaving so far?"
"Passive income"	"What does passive mean to you?" → "This is a business, it takes work at the start. How many hours a week are you prepared to give it?"
"Security" / "stability"	"What feels insecure right now?" → "Did something happen that made you think about it?"
"For my family" / "for my kids"	"What would change for them?" → "What are you missing out on right now?"
"I've been interested for a while"	"How long?" → "What's stopped you so far?" → "So what's different now?"
"I just want to learn"	"Learn so you can do what?" → "People don't invest in a mentor just to learn. What are you going to do with it?"
"Generational wealth" / "build something"	"What does that look like in numbers?" → "Why you, and why now?"
"A side hustle"	"Why do you need one?" → "What's the main job not giving you?"
"I like Freeman's content"	"What is it about Freeman that makes you think he's the right mentor for you?" → "Liking his videos is one thing. What makes you ready to actually do it?"
"I want to be my own boss"	"Boss of what? Paint me the picture." → "What's it like answering to someone else right now?"

Challenge the easy way out (whatever they've mentioned):

> “Why not just try it on your own, or with your friend's property?”

> “You said you've been watching YouTube on it for a year. What's that got you so far?”

Play it back before money:

> “So let me make sure I've got this right. You want [goal] because [pain], and it has to be now because [reason]. Is that right?”

If I can't say that line, they're not ready for Freeman. Keep digging, or book a check-in.

7. Location

> “Whereabouts are you based?”

Rapport ("we've helped someone near there"). Scotland: Management only, never rent-to-rent.

8. Money (use the form, soft, not a bank manager)

> “I can see on the form you've set about [X–Y] aside. Is that just sitting in your bank doing nothing right now? (playful)”

> “Is that liquid? Are you closer to [X] or [Y]?”

> “Freeman always recommends being creative with cash flow, so you're not using all your hard cash. Do you have access to any credit, like a credit card with an extra £1–2k?”

> “So about [£X] cash plus [£Y] credit, roughly [£Z] you're prepared to invest. Have I got that right?”

Then plant that it's paid (Freeman's line):

> “Just so there are no surprises: his name's Freeman, but it's not free, haha. There's an investment for him to support you to [their goal]. He'll go through everything with you on the call. If it's the right fit, are you in a position to invest in yourself?”

> Don't
> Never quote a price, a payment plan or a discount, even if they ask. "That's exactly what Freeman goes through with you, built around your situation."

9. Who decides (partners: book them on)

> “Are you doing this on your own, or with a partner?”

Alone: "So the final decision is yours?"

Partner:

> “As much as you want to do this, your partner's a big part of your life. Even if they're on the call for five minutes, it's really good for them to see Freeman and hear it first-hand. That way there's trust and clarity, rather than Chinese whispers, and them thinking "who's this random guy online asking for money?"”

> “Freeman does weekend calls for couples so you can both be there. Would Saturday or Sunday afternoon work for you both?”

> “And even if they weren't keen, is this something you'd still want to do?”

Couples go in Sat or Sun, 12:30–3 only, at a time both can attend. Tell Freeman in advance. Weekdays are only for couples who are hot leads and can both make it.

10. Give them the trailer of Freeman's call

> “So you know what to expect: this call isn't a chit-chat, and it's not a consultation. Freeman's going to understand where you are right now in your property journey, versus where he can take you through his paid mentorship. If the investment makes sense, the programme makes sense, and you feel like he's a cool guy, he'll get you signed up on the call. Does that sound fair?”

They have to say yes to this. If they hesitate, that's the objection. Handle it now, not on Freeman's call.

11. Book (only if the six standards are met)

> “Honestly, I think you'd be a great fit. I've got Freeman's calendar in front of me and he's got some availability this week. When works for you?”

Fit it round their life. Pencil the slot into Freeman's calendar.

The one rule:

> “One rule though. Before you get on with Freeman, I need you to have watched the video in full. It's about 25 minutes. When can you sit down with it?”

> “I'll give you a call at [time] after you've watched it, a bit of homework, haha, to go through it with you. If you haven't watched it, I'll move your call. Not to be awkward: I don't want you investing in something you don't fully understand.”

Book the check-in outside work hours, not their lunch break.

12. Set the standard for the call

> “It's on Google Meet. Camera on, somewhere quiet, not driving. Treat it like the interview it is, haha. If you're on your phone, download the Meet app before.”

> “Can you accept the invite now while I'm on, so the slot's secured?”

13. Close it with a fixed touchpoint

> “So that's the video tonight, I'll call you at [time] to go through it, and you're with Freeman on [day] at [time]. I'll also send you [testimonial that fits them] so you can see their results.”

A specific day and time, never "I'll give you a call next week". Then send the confirmation SMS straight away.

Call 2: the check-in (after the video)

Prove they watched it (Freeman's questions; ask at least three):

> “How did you find it? What did you like about what Freeman mentioned?”

> “What is it about Freeman's character or personality that makes you think he's a good mentor for you?”

> “Did you get the concept of Airbnb? Do you mind explaining it back to me in the most basic way possible?”

> “Did you like the part where he talked about locations? Or about pricing?”

Not watched in full? Book a new time today. Still not watched by the day: move Freeman's call.

Why, round two (let them fight to get to the call):

> “Since we last spoke, why do you still want to do this?”

> “What's going to be different about you this time, compared to everything else you've looked at?”

> “What would stop you from moving forward on the call with Freeman?”

Isolate it: "Apart from [X], is there anything else?" Solve X now.

Lock it:

> “So you want [goal] because [pain], and now's the time because [reason]. How excited are you for [day]?”

> “As promised, here's [client], who reminds me of you. Same position, a job they didn't like, long hours. They finally made the change. I want that to be you.”

Partner: "Is [partner] still joining? What do you think they'll say when you start seeing results?"

When they don't take it seriously (no-shows, noise, eating)

Militant, but playful. Use their own application against the behaviour, then rebook properly.

> “Hey [Name], I'm going to be honest with you, because I want this to work for you. You applied to work with Freeman, and on your application you said you want [their goal, e.g. to leave your job]. If you had an interview for a job you really wanted, would you join it from the hairdresser's? I'm not having a go. I just want you to give yourself the best chance. Freeman's very busy and he set that time aside for you. When can you give it your full attention: somewhere quiet, camera on, 45 minutes?”

On the call and they're eating or distracted:

> “You can eat, this isn't school, haha. But I want to give you my full attention, and I need yours. Shall we do it properly in 10 minutes, or carry on now?”

A second no-show with no good reason: no rebook with Freeman. Back to a check-in with me first.

After Freeman's call: call, don't text

Every lead who didn't sign on the call gets a phone call, not a text, the same day or the next morning.

> “Hey [Name], it's Tye. Just calling to see how your call with Freeman went. What did you think?”

> “What stood out for you?”

> “What's stopping you from getting started?”

Then a friendly nudge, as their confidant:

> “Can I be honest with you, as a friend? You told me you want [goal] because [pain]. That doesn't change by waiting. What do you need to get this moving?”

Log what they said in Close, and tell Freeman before you agree any next step.

Extra 1: explaining Management (simply)

Use it for ATA1 leads, anyone under £5k, Scotland, or anyone nervous about a lease. Most people don't watch the video properly (it's an emotional video, not an education one), so educate as you sell. Check in after each part: "Does that make sense so far?"

1. The traditional way first

> “The traditional way of running an Airbnb is you pay the landlord a fixed rent and you're responsible for the bills. Say guests pay you £4,000 in a month, and rent and bills are £2,000. The £2,000 difference is your profit. But you're financially responsible for everything: the rent, the bills, the deposit, the furniture.”

2. Then Management

> “With management, you go into partnership with the property owner instead. You don't pay the rent, the bills or the set-up. You still run it on Airbnb: the listing, the pricing, the guests, the cleaning. And you take a percentage of what it makes.”

3. Why it's the smart start

> “So it's all the perks of Airbnb without being financially responsible for the property. Much lower risk, much lower cost to start. And you're learning exactly the same skills you'd use for rent-to-rent. When you're ready, you can move into rent-to-rent with the profit.”

4. The 2-in-1 (ASA2 rent-to-rent leads under £5k)

> “Right now I'd be doing you a disservice getting you started in rent-to-rent, where you're financially responsible for everything. Management gets you all the perks of Airbnb without that. And in the mentorship Freeman teaches you both anyway. How does that sound?”

Questions they ask:

- "Why would an owner let me run their property?" → "They get a professionally run property, and usually more than a normal let, without doing the work themselves. Freeman gives you the pitch and the proposal."
- "What percentage do I get?" → "It depends on the deal you agree with the owner, and Freeman shows you how to structure it. That's part of what he teaches."
- "Do I need to own anything?" → "No. That's the point. No property, no lease, no rent."
- "Is it less money than rent-to-rent?" → "Per property, usually yes. But there's no rent risk, so you can take on more of them, and you're earning while you learn."

Routing reminder: £7k+ rent-to-rent only (don't confuse them with Management). £5–7k rent-to-rent, Management only if they're nervous about a lease. £2.5–5k Management. Scotland Management only. Came from the Management video: stay on Management.

Extra 2: the time objection

"I haven't got time." "I work long hours." "I've got kids." "I'm too busy right now."

It's almost never really about time. It's priority, or fear that it won't work. Find which one.

Step 1: Agree, then get the real number

> “Totally get it. Most of the people Freeman works with have full-time jobs, some with kids as well. Realistically, how many hours a week could you give this? Three? Five?”

Most people say three to five. That's enough to start.

Step 2: Make their week real

> “Walk me through a normal week. When do you finish work? What do you do in the evenings?”

> “How many hours of TV or scrolling would you say that is?”

(Playful, not judging. They'll laugh, and they'll find the hours themselves.)

Step 3: Bring back their why

> “You told me you want [goal] because [pain]. If nothing changes, where are you this time next year? Still working the same hours?”

> “So the hours you're working now are exactly why you're doing this.”

Step 4: Isolate it

> “If time wasn't an issue, is there anything else stopping you?”

If no: solve time and book. If yes: that's the real objection. Handle that one instead.

Step 5: Proof and the plan

> “Amara was doing 12-hour shifts and still runs hers. Freeman shows you how to set it up so it doesn't eat your life: cleaners, automated messaging, co-hosts. And on the call he'll map out a plan around your hours.”

Variations:

- "I work shifts / nights" → "That's actually an advantage. Most of the work is messages on your phone, and you can do the viewings on your days off. Which days are you off?"
- "I've got kids" → "Is that part of why you're doing this? So you're not working these hours forever and you get more time with them?"
- "Maybe in a few months when it's quieter" → "What's going to be different in a few months? Three months from now you'll be in exactly the same spot, just three months later. What would it mean to have your first property running by then instead?"
- "I can't find time for the call / the video" → "If you can't find 25 minutes for the video, then honestly, now might not be the right time, and that's OK. But if this matters as much as you told me, when can you sit down with it today?"

Every time objection ends with a booked time: the video, the check-in or Freeman's call. Never "I'll get back to you".

Extra 3: the objections that keep coming up

From my own calls, 1 to 15 October (full review: library/call-review-oct.md). Same pattern every time: ask before answering, isolate it, tie it back to their why, end with a time I chose.

"How much is it?" / "Just tell me the price"

The most common one, and quoting a number cost us Wilson, Chris, Tina and Ajaratu.

> “Fair question. Honestly, I couldn't give you a number even if I wanted to. Freeman builds it around where you are and where you want to get to. What I can tell you is it's paid one-to-one mentorship, it's not free, and he goes through every bit of it on the call. If the investment made sense for you, is this something you'd want to do?”

If they push:

> “I get it, nobody wants to waste their time. That's why I asked what you've got set aside. Freeman will know that before you get on.”

If they won't book without a number:

> “Then honestly, now might not be the right time, and that's OK. This is for people who want to see if it's the right fit, not to shop around for a number.”

"I'm not ready" / "When I'm ready, I'll reach out"

> “Totally fair. Can I ask, what does ready actually look like for you? What has to be in place?”

> “And when will that be in place?”

> “And if it's still the same this time next year, what's that cost you?”

> “Let's do this: I'll call you on [day] at [time]. If you're ready, great. If not, I'll leave you be. Fair?”

If they said the same last time (Moo said it in April and again in October): "You said the same back in April. What's changed since then?"

"I need to talk to my partner" / "My partner said no"

> “Makes sense, it's a joint decision. What exactly did they say? What were they worried about?”

> “If that was sorted, would they be on board?”

> “That's exactly why I want them on Freeman's call, so they hear it first-hand rather than second-hand from you. Saturday or Sunday afternoon?”

If the partner has already said "put it on hold", don't let the call go ahead without them (Stella).

"Can I pay in instalments?" / "Is there any wiggle room?"

> “That's one for Freeman, he goes through all of that with you on the call. What I need to know is: if the numbers worked, are you in?”

Don't
Never offer instalments, splitting it, wiggle room or "use a credit card and pay monthly", even after Freeman's call. Log what they said and tell Freeman.

"Is this a scam?" / "The advert said it was free"

> “Honestly, I'd be worried if you weren't careful. What would you need to see to feel comfortable?”

Then: testimonials, Freeman's YouTube, the call is on Google Meet with cameras on, and they pay nothing on my call.

If the advert said it was free:

> “The video and the training on the page are free, yes. Working with Freeman one-to-one is paid. That's why I say it upfront, so there are no surprises. Is that a problem for you?”

"I'm looking at other mentors"

> “Good, you should compare. What did you like about them? And what's stopping you going with them?”

Listen. Then match what they want (one-to-one support, a plan built around their hours) to Freeman. Never knock the other person.

"I've got no time for another intro call" (Chris)

> “I get it. This isn't another intro call: it's where Freeman maps out your plan, built around your hours. 45 minutes. If it's not for you after that, no hard feelings.”

"My interest has cooled" / "The excitement's gone"

> “When you applied, something made you fill that form in. What was going on for you then?”

> “Has that changed, or has life just got busy?”

If the reason is still there, the interest is too. Book the video for a set time.

"Easier said than done"

> “Which part feels the hardest?”

Answer that one part, then isolate it: "If that part was sorted, is there anything else?"

"My area isn't good for Airbnb" / "The videos are all London"

> “What makes you think that?”

Ask first, then answer. Freeman looks at their area with them on the call. Scotland: Management only.

"I'll call you" / "Ring me next week"

> “I appreciate that. I'd rather lock it in, though, so I'm not chasing you. Tuesday at 6 or Wednesday at 10?”

Visa or sponsorship questions

> “Good question. That's one Freeman will go through with you on the call, so you get the right answer.”

Never guess.

Never say

Don't
Prices, payment plans or discounts. "VSL". Guaranteed income, passive income, start with no money, quit your job, Freeman does it all for you, "the call is just for info", or anything that lets them think I'm Freeman.

Don't
Any range ("maximum 3K", "low four figures"). "It's only profit with management." Per-property earnings. Unconfirmed stats about Freeman. Guesses on visas. "Sorry if I've disturbed you." "No worries, no stress" as the last line of a call.

After every call

1. Pencil Freeman's calendar (remove the block if it falls through). Couples: weekend slot, and Freeman told in advance.
2. WhatsApp group with the partner. Send the one video for their route + a testimonial that fits them.

3. Close task for the check-in at the agreed time, and send the confirmation SMS.
4. Close note in my words: headline, based, work, goal in numbers, why / pain / why now in their exact words, funds (liquid + credit), decision maker, video watched (yes / partly / no), the objection they raised, and the slot. → /log
5. Airtable row.
