Airbnb vs deal sourcing in one breath

"Airbnb / rent-to-rent is where you take on and run your own property, so it needs more startup capital. Deal sourcing is where you find opportunities and package them for investors. It's lower capital, and the skills carry over to getting your own units later."

Objections

They say	You say
"How much is it?"	It depends which route fits. For Airbnb the main thing is having around £5-7k to start the first unit properly. Where are you at budget-wise?
"I don't have £5-7k."	That's fine. Airbnb might not be the first step then. [£2.5k+ → Management] [£1k+ → deal sourcing]
"I've only got about £500."	Full support might not be the best fit yet, but the Deal Sourcing Blueprint is a good self-paced start.
"I need to think about it."	Fair. What is it you want to think over: the money, the time, or whether it'll work for you?
"I'm not ready."	What would 'ready' look like for you? Most students start before they feel fully ready.
"I'll contact you later."	No problem. So I'm not chasing you, what day and time works for 10 minutes?
"Can you just explain it all now?"	I can give you the overview, but the right breakdown depends on your goals, budget and timeline. If you're a fit, Freeman goes through it properly.
"Is it guaranteed?"	Nothing in property is guaranteed. It depends on the area, the deal, the setup and your effort. The call's there to assess your situation.
"I've done another programme."	Useful to know. What did you learn, and where are you still stuck?
"I already have properties."	Then it's more of a scaling conversation. What are you trying to improve: units, bookings, systems or profit?
"Just browsing."	Curious, or something you genuinely want to start soon? (still cold → YouTube)

Never say

Don't

"You'll make £1,500 a month per property" · "guaranteed property / income" · "passive income" · "you don't need compliance" · "start with no money" · "you can definitely quit your job" · "Freeman will do everything" · "the call's just for info" · "everyone gets a deal from the investor network".

Say instead: "target example, not a guarantee" · "depending on the area and deal" · "the call is to assess fit" · "the programme supports you, but you still need to take action".

Gold guarantee: "Gold comes with a guarantee Freeman will walk you through on the call." Never promise a property yourself.

Profit example (target only): "Some units target around £800-£1,500 a month profit depending on area, demand and setup. No guarantees, which is why Freeman assesses your situation properly."

Visa / immigration: no legal advice. "There may be an option to source under Freeman's company framework, subject to approval, usually with around a 30% operational fee."
